

Part 1 ⑥ The Self and History, The Self in History

The most fundamental question about any history is “Who is the historian; how does he or she define himself or herself?” Secondly, “What questions is he or she asking; why?” Although we may aspire or pretend to objectivity, history always has a subjective element which is understood better if its nature is recognized.